THE ANARCHISTS' CASE

Butler and Grinnell Conclude Their Arguments.

The Writ of Error Before the Supreme Court.

A General Impression Among Those Interested

That the Anarchists Have Lost Their Case.

The Anarchists' Case

Washington, October 29. [Special.] In the supreme court today Judges Harlan and Gray of the state's attorney's affidavit of the anarchist case. Mr. Butler argued that the writ of error. He said that so far as the conduct of the jury was concerned, there was no error in the case which was raised by the defense and to which Mr. Strafford, who was the last person to be heard, had been objected to. He had also been objected to, but at the time Judge Gary was accused that the defense had the right to take 42 peremptory challenges. Grinnell said he did not desire and this was not the place to apologize for anything he had done in the case. He believed, however that he had always been regarded as proper to deprive a criminal of the instruments of his crime and to use the instruments as evidence against him. [illegible] when the pistol was taken by force from Gilbert Guiteau, and if he remembered rightly Guiteau's papers had also been seized. He recited the history of the bomb throwing in Chicago and enumerated articles, such as dynamite, etc., which belonged to Spies, Lingg and others of the anarchists and which had been taken not from their homes, but from the Arbiter Zeitung office, the headquarters for the anarchist party. He argued that the question was not how did the articles get before the court but what they prove, and again referred to the case of Kerr as the people of Illinois. After speaking [illegible] Grinnell closed.

Butler rose and objected to the part of Grinnell's argument on the ground that it went outside of the printed record and brought in extraneous matter to which no reference had been made. This extraneous matter had no connection with the case and could not be permitted. He said he was sorry that had been taken by surprise by the line of their client's put in by Grinnell.

Mr. Grinnell, interrupting, said he understood the counsel on the other side to make a complaint that there were indications of unreasonable search and seizure. Their printed briefs showed that a great many things had been seized and he (Grinnell) had simply called their other things had also been seized.

General Butler said he would state the points of contention and if the state [illegible] them wrongly he wanted to be corrected by any gentleman who did not admit the right to steal men and [illegible] steal their papers. After describing what happened previous to the haymarket meeting he said: At the meeting [illegible] body for some purpose, and there was not one word in the whole thousand pages of evidence to show that anyone of those men had anything to do with the throwing of that bomb. Its explosion killed a single policeman, and without a few days all those men were arrested without warrants, committed to jail and held there without examination and without process until they were indicted by a grand jury. He said he was ready to pledge himself that there was not a single man of the 1025 selected who had not said that he had a bias, and each of them an enthusiastic conviction opinion and prejudice against the defendants. After a great deal of randomness about the composition of jury, discussion [illegible] with the record, lack of time for [illegible] tion, sentencing of prisoners in their absence and that of their counsel, the injustice done them by unreasonable search and seizure, etc., General Butler said if all these things could be done, the question was to be debated whether this government would not be better if it were western Dahomey rather than if it were to be carried on in this fashion. I have no fear, the cord, of being misunderstood upon that question. I have the individuality of being the only man in the United States that was denied and executed a writ of error according to western law. There were thousands of them, and for [illegible] was set upon my head as though I were a wolf and a [illegible] was offered for me [illegible] by Jefferson Davis and his associates and who if they were living at this time trying to ascertain whether they should have an honest and fair trial for their great crimes, and they called upon me, their lives in danger I should hold it to be my duty to do all that I could to defend them.

After some further talk General Butler said he argued fully that the first ten amendments of the constitution were a prohibition to the United States and Newport News and Mississippi Valley company

The Denver chamber of commerce is advocating the establishment of wool-scouring works in that city. If these works are built, and their operation proves successful it will have a very healthful effect upon the wool industry of the state.

Express Messenger Smith of the Wells, Fargo Express company who distinguished himself near San Antonio Texas, a few weeks ago by killing two outlaws, has been made the recipient of $2000 from the governor of that state. This substantial recognition of Smith's pluck would have a powerful influence in exciting other express messengers to like achievements.

In remarking upon the project of erecting a memorial to Charles Dickens in London, the Chicago Tribune said:

If those London enthusiasts who are pushing the election of a $200,000 monument to Charles Dickens and have raised $80,000, would but adopt Dickens own idea of a monument Mr Labouchere and others who are now opposing would no doubt become contributors. The Dickens idea of a suitable monument to literary genius is "a great free school exciting the humblest workingman to come on and be a student."

No matter how important are the issues involved in the pending U S United States senatorial fight, or the anarchists' case, the country at large rejoices in the fact that in the city of Denver the court is to deal with the matter justly and fairly. The supreme court of this country occupies a high place among the leading judicial tribunals of the world. The United States court is known as an incorruptible, and its power to deal out the case in a dispassionate and appropriate manner will give their decision a strong weight of force which sometimes does not accompany the decisions of other named courts.

The political atmosphere of New York city is at present at a fever heat. The County Democracy and Tammany Hall each have their forces and nominated a full city and county ticket. The nomination of Colonel John R Fellows for the district attorneyship was an outrage to public sentiment and some of the leading men of the party, supported by The World have repudiated it. If the convention which nominated Colonel Fellows had only had the wisdom of the respectable element of the party and not have nominated him they would have stood a powerful influence in exciting other [illegible] to like achievements.

Dining the year just [illegible] there have been less fires than for several years past. This falling off may be ascribed partially to the business depression which the country is now enjoying, and partially to the fact that the [illegible] class are learning to realize that more [illegible] than by long continued struggles with the powers of capital. The recent general assembly of the Knights of Labor, which met at Minneapolis also solved what was known as the "secret fund." In Mr Powderly's opinion the right distribution of this fund will take the [illegible] of strikes. Many strikes were inaugurated which resulted in long hours of enforced idleness for those engaged in them, many families were [illegible] by assessments collected from other members of the order who were [illegible] work. But after all no one who [illegible] strike will dare to [illegible] the [illegible] by supporting themselves while out of employment. As long as this fund existed it was really just a premium on strikes and idleness. Idle men and [illegible] workmen were compelled to support men out of
